You can imagine myself with my head bowed over the keyboard, while patiently waiting for the world to get on with its creation. Now you may be thinking that what's my story? Who am I? It's the same story, the only difference is that I've written it in an email. I've managed to combine two of my favorite things: email and writing. Today, I received an email from someone on the other side of the world and it made me cry. We share the same story. It's a tale of a mother and a daughter who are the very essence of love and understanding. It's a tale of a time when the streets had to walk every day and a

Q: Build and print documentation for an existing webapp I'm searching for a way to build documentation. The main purpose is to run the webapp an then have a readme on the pages in which I need to document. I don't want to modify the source files but rather have to run the webserver and then some scripts which create the pdf. I'm currently using a customized GAE app. Does anyone know how to realize this? A: GAE docs . Funding. This study was supported by the Natural Science Foundation of China (Grant No. 81472819). I remember that the book described a story about someone who fights his way through a world with swords and knives, only to find out that his sword was lying in a river, after he killed the last of the enemies. He then has to figure out how to get the sword back. Apparently, the book was a fantasy novel, but I have a vague e79caf774b
